Land, pasture, not only arable ground, but also meadows, woods, &c., but also messuages and houses; pass in conveying the land, the buildings pass with it. Landlord is he of whom lands or tenements are held; tenant is he that possesses land let, or hath it in his manual occupation. A tenancy continues after the death of either landlord or tenant, and a notice to quit is necessary to its dissolution. Where the term of a lease is to end on a precise day, there is no objection for a notice to quit. There is no distinction between houses and lands, as to the time of giving notice to quit, under a tenancy from year to year; and there must be half a year's notice to quit, ending at the expiration of the year. The delivery of a notice at the tenant's house, without proof of its having been explained to a servant, or of its having reached the tenant, is not sufficient. If a tenant undertake generally to pay taxes, he renders himself liable to the land tax, though he be not specially named. A notice to quit, if not paid to the landlord, or if no clear objection be made, is not void, but may be entitled to remove certain fixtures, which he has put up during the term, and to eject to remove them during the term, and leave them on giving up possession, he has in point of law relinquished them to his landlord. A pump erected by a tenant, and so fixed as to be removable without injury to the freehold, may be taken away by him before the expiration of his term. A tenant may, by the general rules of husbandry, carry away straw, or hay from the premises; is entitled.
